

Documentation

Since stalking often involves a collection of seemingly small incidents and the stalker may only threaten you indirectly, it is critical to document all stalking behaviors including emails and messages. The evidence will help prove what has been going on if you decide to apply for a protective order or to report the stalking to the police. Your role is very important because sometimes you are the only person with access to the evidence.

Make sure you:

- ◆ Keep a detailed log of every incident including the time, date, description, location, witnesses, officer badge number and name, evidence collected, how you felt (e.g., frightened, alarmed), and how it affected your life.
- ◆ Save all messages, texts, gifts, letters, etc. from the stalker (or a third party acting on the stalker's behalf) and ask police to save them
- ◆ Take pictures or videos
- ◆ Call police for documentation and protection
- ◆ When police respond, give as much information as possible to establish the history of previous incidents
- ◆ Get copies of police reports (on every incident)
- ◆ Follow-up an investigation by contacting the investigator to provide and/or obtain additional information

You are not to blame for a stalker's behavior.

Are you being stalked?

Is someone repeatedly following or watching you, showing up unexpectedly, or communicating with you in ways that seem obsessive or make you concerned or afraid for your safety?

Stalking is a pattern of behavior that usually is very frightening, unpredictable and dangerous. The stalker might be someone you have had a relationship with or someone you don't know or have barely met. Stalking can begin at any time, including after a no contact order has been issued.

Stalkers do things like:

- Follow you
- Show up in unexpected places
- Call or text repeatedly
- Send unwanted cards, gifts or messages
- Drive by or hang around your home, school or work
- Use technology, like hidden GPS or cameras, to track you
- Find out about you by using public records or on-line search services, hiring investigators, going through your garbage, or contacting friends, family, neighbors, or co-workers
- Keep tabs on you through family and friends
- Threaten you, people you love or your pets
- Damage your property
- Repeatedly track you in ways not mentioned above

Stalking is a crime.

If you think you are being stalked:

Take threats seriously and trust your instincts. Don't downplay danger.

Stop all contact. Any response, even a negative one, may encourage a stalker.

If you can't stop all contact, focus on how to be safe when you have to have contact.

3.4 million people are stalked each year in the United States.

Report any threats or frightening behavior to the police immediately for protection and documentation.

Tell others you trust about your situation (school, childcare, employer, friends, family, neighbors, etc.). Keeping it secret empowers the stalker.

Call one of the agencies in this brochure and find out what help is available (even if your situation is not domestic violence).

If you do not get the level of service you need from any agency, ask to speak to a supervisor or try another agency. Don't get discouraged. You have a right to be protected!

In an emergency, you can board any LexTran bus and ask for a ride to safe shelter.

Plan ahead for your safety!

Everyone's situation is unique. Only you can determine what will make you safer but here are a few things to consider:

Think about how to get away from danger in every situation. Plan escape routes and safe places and keep a charged cell phone handy.

Disconnect joint services such as bank accounts, credit cards, utilities, phones, etc. and ask agencies to keep your information confidential.

When you tell others about your situation, show them pictures of the stalker and let them know what kind of car he/she drives. Tell them what to do if they see the stalker or the stalker's car at your home, workplace, school, etc. (i.e. call the police or notify security). Develop a signal or code word to let others know when you need help.

Ask an advocate to help you develop a safety plan. The Sheriff's Office Safety Planner will even come to your home.

Vary routines and travel routes. Avoid being isolated or alone. Don't agree to meet with the stalker, even in public.

Talk to your children about how to be safe and what to do if something happens.

Search the internet to see what personal information about you is available and take steps to protect your privacy.

Call the police if the stalker violates the protective order. Stalking can be a violation of a protective order, bond condition or other type of court order.
